

WPROWADZENIE

I am honored to present the new issue of Research on Enterprise in Modern Economy – Theory and Practice journal. Since the first issue published in 2012 the journal has been focused on promoting a broad and lively discussion between scholars and practitioners devoted to the topic of entrepreneurship, economics and management. As problems encountered in both global and national economies become more complex, searching for solutions requires specialists from different domains to align efforts and utilize findings from different fields. This is the main reason why journal's editors continue to welcome a spectrum of topics and methodologies which is present in submitted manuscripts.

This trend is continued in the current issue which includes articles devoted to such topics as venture creation and aspects related to their development. Various social, environmental and financial challenges encountered by enterprises operating in different branches are present in the discussion elicited by authors. The topic of innovation and knowledge which is so crucial for ventures' development is also present in articles included in the issue. It should also be emphasized that authors adopt different perspectives. For example some of them focus on specific economies whereas others present the global point of view in their considerations.

Every article included in the current issue expands and compliments our knowledge. With great pleasure I recommend them to readers. I would like to thank authors for their willingness to share research results and thoughtful insights and reviewers for their contribution that facilitated the development of articles.

Paweł Ziemiański